Bill Cunningham New York

84 minutes (2010)

A film by Richard Press (2010)

“We all get dressed for Bill,” said Vogue’s editor Wintour. Until his death at 87 on June 25, 2016, Bill Cunningham turned fashion photography into his own branch of cultural anthropology on the streets of New York, by training his busily observant lens on what people wore – stylishly, flamboyantly, or just plain sensibly.

His New York Times columns “On the Street” and “Evening Hours” documented time, place, and the shift in dress habits from formality to something more diffuse and individualistic. Bill Cunningham New York portrays this unassuming artist at home, on his bicycle, and at the office.
